

Ryan Cox is an Asheville-based stand-up comedian whose relaxed delivery weaves twisted storytelling with crafted punchlines. Sweet, Southern and a little absurd, Ryan finds the funny in the middle of everything — middle age, middle ground, and middle America. His PG-13 style blends heart, wit and a touch of existential humor about family, technology and staying human in weird times. Fresh off his Dry Bar Comedy special "Sweet Spot," Ryan has performed for audiences nationwide and opened for Reggie Watts, Pete Lee, and Beth Stelling. Ryan hosts Home Planet with Ryan Cox, a podcast that explores the creative process through intimate conversations with comedians, musicians, and artists from all walks of life. From clubs to alt rooms and theaters, Ryan delivers laughs that sneak up on you and stick around for the ride.

Petey Smith-McDowell has been traveling around the country telling jokes since 2009. He has opened up for Beth Stelling, Hannibal Buress, and Trevor Noah. Just to name a few. Petey runs The Disclaimer, a standup comedy room in Asheville and has a popular Asheville-based comedy Instagram @peteysmithmcdowell.

Sarah Love is a comedian based in Asheville, North Carolina. Her comedy is blunt, relatable, and just unhinged enough to keep you guessing. She's shared the stage with Aparna Nancherla, Joe Zimmerman, and fan favorite Amber Autry. Sarah has performed all over the Southeast including at Zanies Lab in Nashville, The Orange Peel, and is a regular on Don't Tell Comedy shows across the region. She is a wry yet kinetic comic with a rebellious streak.
